When talking to a diverse non-specialist audience like ours, it might be a good idea to add some bits of informal otherwise excellent presentation, some humour maybe. Making it less formal could help people who are not so interested in and informed about bailouts to stay concentrated. Also, switching between macro and micro level probably help to stimulate interest. I mean, some vignettes about the experiences of particular individuals sur (and government's response) could make your presentation more colourful.

I liked her knowledge in the field of business law, in general and in the areas of her expertise, in particular. She questions very logically and the Seminar was very successful.
